Baharat: Turkish spice mix Baharat means "spices" in Arabic. In this mix, classic Middle Eastern spices are blended with the sweet scents of cassia bark and nutmeg. It's the perfect seasoning to throw into long slow braises or tagines, especially those using red meat. Also good as a dry marinade for grilled chops, roasts meats and barbecued seafood. Baharat works beautifully in soups, tomato dishes and fish stews.

Chermoula: The North African wet spice mix Chermoula is a clever combination of the heady robust flavours of cumin, coriander and sweet spices, with lemon and garlic. It's a great addition to tagines, stews, soups and braises; and for rubbing into lamb, beef, rabbit, veal and poultry ahead of long slow roasting or gentle grilling. Be warned: high heat will burn it. Or try adding to a pan of sautéed vegetables that are just about cooked.

Classic Egyptian Dukkah: This is a blend of roasted hazelnuts seasoned with strong aromatics and toasted sesame seeds. The most popular way to eat Dukkah is as a snack: dip crusty bread into olive oil, then into the Dukkah. It's also a fine seasoning for soft boiled or fried eggs; grilled cheese, vegetables, liver and chicken; and fish or salads.

Golden Ras el Hanout: North African spice mix, which loosely translates as "house blend". Cooks from Tunisia to Morocco swear by their own Rasel Hanout blends, which can include up to 30 ingredients. Use it as you would curry powder in poultry, rabbit, veal, pork, seafood, egg, cooked-pulse and vegetable dishes, or in soups, tagines, braises, sautés, roasts, pastas and risottos. Also good when mixed with flour as a dusting for meats destined for a frying pan or grill.

Harissa, Green: This is a milder take on red Harissa. Green Harissa is a blend of fresh coriander with green chillies, garlic and aromatics. The flavour is round and sweet with an apple-like fruitiness. It's an ideal seasoning for swirling into stews, soups, sauces, whipped butters, vinaigrettes, pastas and risottos. Also used as an accompaniment to couscous, pilaf, tagines, grills, roasts, and in sandwiches.

Harissa, Red: A fiery spicy Moroccan paste. Spices including cumin and roasted coriander bring fantastic complexity to Harissa's flavour. It's the perfect seasoning for adding depth and character to sauces, particularly mayonnaise, hollandaise, vinaigrettes and whipped butters, to stews, soups, broths, pastas and risottos. It can also be used as an accompaniment to couscous, pilaf, tagines, grills, roasts and, if you're brave, in sandwiches.

Jordanian Za'atar: Jordanian Za'atar is characterised by its heady mix of wild thyme, spearmint and toasted sesame seeds. It should always be mixed with sumac (a crushed berry) and olive oil and is most often found brushed onto bread dough and baked. Or brush the mix on to meats such as roast lamb, beef, veal, rabbit, pork, chicken or robust fish (mackerel, sardines, salmon and tuna) before they're grilled or roasted. Also great sprinkled on salads or on grilled cheese and vegetables.

Preserved Lemons with Honey: Preserving lemon in salt adds complex spicy undertones to the sourness of the lemon. The addition of honey and sweet spices gives further depth and more rounded sweetness. It's the perfect seasoning for adding piquancy to tagines, braises and fricassees, salads, dressings, mayonnaise, whipped butters and hollandaise sauce. (Make sure you use only the rind of the preserved lemons and discard the flesh.)
